At the start of this stage stands Port-en-Bessin, its port always lively when the fishing boats return, particularly during the scallop season. Head on to discover pretty villages, their lanes lined with long stone walls, and manor-style farms dotted along narrow country lanes. You then reach Arromanches and its famed artificial Mulberry Harbour, towed over from England following the D-Day landings of 6 June 1944 as part of the greater Operation Overlord to win back Normandy.

The route

Upstream of Port-en-Bessin, the route provides for a temporary bypass back to the coast. If you opt for a getaway to Port-en-Bessin, you will then have to retrace your steps to go back to Huppain to find the marked route via Etréham. You join the coast at the level of Longues Batteries, from where a greenway leads you as far as Arromanches.
